

Get speedy healthcare services delivered with automated prior authorization

Customer experience is critical in a B2C market, particularly in healthcare, where the stakes are high. The current prior authorization (PA) process, on the other hand, is inefficient and places additional strain on healthcare providers and payers. The failure to obtain speedy authorization may have negative health repercussions for patients. In 92% of cases, PA causes treatment delays ranging from 6 hours to 30 days. 90% of physicians believe that PA is detrimental to their profession due to increased workload.

The current economic environment necessitates rethinking resource allocation as the yearly prior permission procedure costs between $23 and $31 billion in the US. The industry could save around $437 million annually by implementing automated PA.
